WHEN BUYING BATH TOWELS

When buying bath towels, _____ (name of specialist) textile (or home-management) specialist at _____ (name of college), says it is well to keep in mind the needs and habits of the different members of the family. Buying large, heavy towels exclusively is not always economical, she says, particularly when there are children in the family. Small towels, light in weight, are easier for them to manage. Then, too, the lighter towels are easier to handle on washday. If the laundry is done outside the home and paid for by the pound, lighter-weight towels are often preferred because the increased weight of large bath towels makes bigger laundry bills, especially if they happen to be put in while damp. A good plan is to buy large towels for the adults, if they like them, and small ones for the children.
